Innate Somatic Intelligence Trauma Therapy Approach

SYDNEY TRAINING 2025

ISITTA REGISTRATION FORM

Innate Somatic Intelligence Trauma Therapy Approach, considers applicants for admission to our trainings without regard to age, gender, gender identity, race, creed, color, national/ethnic origin, sexual orientation, physical ability or marital status.

IMPORTANT NOTE:

We want you to be comfortable and safe in this training and want to set the right expectations so you can get the most out of our unique approach to working with trauma. Please note that this trauma training is highly experiential and requires students to be open and curious to explore their own experiences.

This training is suitable for mental health professionals that want to integrate somatic therapy and Hakomi techniques into their existing practice.

Your personal trauma stories might be relevant for learning about trauma from the inside out. This training does not substitute trauma therapy and we highly encourage anyone to have the outside support of a trained mental health professional. Your personal narrative exploration is voluntary and serves as a reflection and deeper understanding to become trauma informed.

The training will require a willingness to engage in somatic practices, including movement and breathing practices. All these practices are done with keeping you and everyone safe you will always have a choice in this training, and no one is excluded for their preferences of learning. We encourage somatic learning from your own experiences so that you can better understand the clients you will be working with.
